Xbox 360, PlayStation 3, and Windows PC. The PlayStation 2 is notoriously hard to use, with its controls often frustrating. In a recent interview, NBA Commissioner Adam Silver discussed the challenges of the game, particularly the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the league's operations. Silver noted that the league's primary focus is on the health and safety of its players and staff, and that the league is committed to providing a high-quality product for its fans. The league is currently in a state of suspended play, and Silver is working closely with the NBA Players Association to resolve the ongoing labor dispute. The league is also exploring various options to ensure that the season can be completed, including the possibility of a shortened season or a restart in a different format. Silver's comments have been widely reported, and fans are eagerly awaiting news of when the season will resume. The league's financial situation is also a concern, with many teams facing significant losses due to the pandemic. The league is working to ensure that all teams are able to remain afloat, and that the league's long-term sustainability is not compromised. Silver's leadership has been praised for his transparency and communication during this difficult time, and fans are hopeful that the league will emerge from this crisis stronger than ever.
